(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent) SOMEWHERE IN THE ATLANTIC, Aug. 8 (Delayed)—(INS)—Life on a destroyer is, for a non-sailor, a little like light housekeeping on the flying horses. For a sailor, it is life which exists on few other navy ships.

The non-sailor eventually becomes accustomed to climbing up or running down decks at an angle of 40 degrees sideways or endways but seldom if ever masters the art of tackling the deck or even his own bunk when the "tin can," as she is lovingly known in

Suggestions For Unity

Washington, Aug. 23.

IN the days immediately following the "Eight Points" statement issued by the Messrs. Roosevelt and Churchill as a result of their deliberations at sea, there was, both in London and here, general and emphatic commendation. It is not too much to say that it was overwhelmingly praised.

NO one, of course, thinks the full facts of the conference were in that statement—not that they have been divulged since. Obviously, that would have been inexpedient as well as unwise. Despite the theatrical aspect of the meeting there is widespread agreement that the results have been good for the cause to which both nations are committed—to wit, the defeat of Hitler and the crushing of the Nazi power.

THE CONTINUED bitterness of the German-Italian comment, and the few discordant notes sounded in Washington by isolationist statesmen, only accentuate the fact that the weight and force of the two nations will be more effectively used in the common interest and that, through personal conversations, a better understanding is established between the two leaders. The advantages of the meeting have been too profoundly stressed by eminent international commentators to require repetition here. What has not been stressed, however, is

State To Administer Institutions For Insane

(By International News Service)

HARRISBURG, Aug. 25.—The State may find it necessary to set up a new organization in all 67 counties for the examination and commitment of indigent insane persons, due to the State taking over the entire care and administration of the mentally ill, Secretary of Welfare E. Arthur Sweeney disclosed. . . . "We find now that we must not only administer all county as well as State mental hospitals, but must in addition provide for the examination and transportation of mental patients from their homes to the hospitals. . . ."

Sweeney estimated that the new task would cost the State approximately $500,000.

He added that the Legislature had made no provision for this extra cost, although his department had foreseen it. "What we would like to do," he said, "would be to have the county agencies now engaged in the work continue, with the State reimbursing them for their costs."

Sweeney said good progress was being made in taking over the county mental hospitals and he forecast that all of them would pass into actual State care within the next few months. They came under legal supervision of the State June 1, but county administration has continued in most cases, with the State footing the expense.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Brilliantly conceived, masterfully executed, and beautifully paced, "Blood and Sand" opened last night at the Grand Theatre and if one is to judge by its reception, it is an assured hit.

Starring Tyrone Power who contributes an inspired performance, the film was produced by Darryl F. Zanuck in blazing Technicolor. Based on the famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, "Blood and Sand" features Linda Darnell and Rita Hayworth at the head of a star-studded cast.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Joan Bennett hilariously goes to work, both literally and figuratively, on Wall Street in Columbia's delightful new comedy, "She Knew All the Answers," which opened yesterday at the Bristol Theatre. With Franchot Turner co-starring as a Wall Street broker who doesn't like show girls, "She Knew All the Answers" is one of the gayest, giddiest and grandest love-and-laugh comedies of the year.

Miss Bennett appears as a night club star, who wants to marry a millionaire playboy. Tone, the boy's guardian, is a stiff-necked, ultra-conservative financier who absolutely forbids the marriage, even though he doesn't know the girl at all. Determined to win his approval, she talks him into giving her a job in his office.

ISM HORN OF PLENTY

RITZ THEATRE

Jack Conway's latest incursion into comedy is the direction of "Love Crazy," co-starring William Powell and Myrna Loy, now at the Ritz Theatre. While the essence of the plot is strictly comedy, at the same time he strove to maintain the importance of the love story between a husband and wife whom circumstances double-cross.

"Comedy, of course, is similar to drama inasmuch as the casual approach is always better," says the director. "Emphasizing the love story, for example, brings the comedy in as an unexpected quotient. Individuals, and this goes for all of us, are naturally perverse. If we know that we're expected to laugh, we won't do it on general principles. If a laugh sneaks up on us, fine and dandy. It's the same thing that so often prompts us to laugh at the temporary misfortune of another. We know we shouldn't, therefore we seem to get twice the kick out of it."

The Great Game of Politics

that with the return of Mr. Roosevelt to Washington, no additional Congressional support for any program for greater co-operation in the British war effort has been gained.

THIS is deplorable but it is true. That the President has a program for more complete co-operation is assumed. Otherwise the conference benefits would be wholly moral and not practical. The disturbing thing is that the opposition in Congress seems to have stiffened rather than relaxed, and some of Mr. Roosevelt's smarter advisers are urging him not to force action on new proposals for extending help to the British until he has further solidified public sentiment behind the proposals and behind himself. The truth is that Administration legislative leaders are still shaken over that House vote by which the draft extension, so vital to the army and so strongly urged by the President, so narrowly escaped defeat.

ANOTHER vote like that would have a really devastating effect. It would painfully demonstrate the lack of unity behind the President's foreign policy. It would encourage the isolationist elements both in and out of Congress. It would enfeeble our defense operations and dismay a good many people. The seriousness of that vote has not been exaggerated. While 133 Republicans voted in the negative as a matter of party policy, it must not be forgotten that it was Democratic defection that made the Republican vote important and the result so close.

TO COPE with the condition thus revealed, the President is advised to do two things—first, to appeal to the people in a radio address; second, to improve his relations with Congress. The latter could be done in various ways. For one thing, he could confer more frequently—and be a little frank—with the responsible Republican leaders, instead of treating them as if they did not exist. In the second place, he could suppress—or, at least, tone down—some of the more blatant and offensive of his Democratic Senatorial spokesmen.

ONE of the worst examples of these is the discredited Senator Claude Pepper, of Florida, who has just been publicly criticized by a special investigating committee of the House for his unethical activities in the matter of Governmental contracts and the outrageous exercise of his position as Senator to land them for his friends. For still another thing, the President could improve his relations with Congress by such a reorganization of his defense organization as to create both Congressional and popular confidence, neither of which is strong today. It is said that he is planning to do exactly that, but the names of those reported to be preparing the plan for him—Mr. Ben Cohen, Judge Samuel Rosenman and Mr. Sidney Hillman—are not likely to reassure either Congress or the country.

SO FAR as the radio appeal is concerned, there probably will be no trouble persuading Mr. Roosevelt to act. But as to the other items there will be more difficulty. They involve doing several things he dislikes. One is to confer conciliatingly with persons toward whom, because of past opposition, he feels bitterly. Another is to replace some of the incompetents around him with men who do not admire him personally and have not concealed the fact. Still another involves admitting the truth about the inadequacy of his defense organization and the lagging of production instead of trying to wisecrack away the very serious charges made by Senator Byrd.

NONE OF these seem very great things to ask of a President in the interests of national unity in a time of crisis. However, hardly any one in Washington thinks he will do them. It is his inability to put aside personal prejudice and petty feelings that makes it hard for his opponents to put them aside either. If there were a different sort of man, for example, there would not have been the caustic comment upon the presence of two of his sons—Franklin, Jr., and Elliott—at the Churchill meeting. Of course, neither had any business being there, but that was not important, except that it needlessly offended the sensibilities of a good many people throughout the country. Mr. Churchill has a son in the army, too, but he was not there.

would be withdrawn as soon as the "danger is over."

Meanwhile, British authorities said they had no confirmation of a report that Iranian troops had withdrawn 12 miles from the frontier as an "evidence of good will."

Britain and Russia translated their warnings to Iran into drastic action after repeatedly urging the Iranian government to oust the Nazi "fifth columnists" and "put an end to German infiltration."

The London Daily Mail reported from Teheran that Iranian troops and artillery pieces moved toward the border throughout the week-end.

Teheran itself was reported calm, but the paper said staff members of the German legation there were hastily preparing to evacuate their wives and children.

Britons and Americans in the Iranian capital were warned to maintain close contact with their legations and to prepare to move into the legation buildings if danger threatened, the Mail stated.

(A Tokyo radio broadcast heard by NBC said 30 divisions of Russian troops were concentrated on the border of Iran.)

The London Evening Star quoted the Moscow radio as stating that Soviet Foreign Commissar V. M. Molotov conferred with the Iranian minister and handed him a note advising that Russian troops entered Iran simultaneously with the British this morning.

Life On Destroyer Is One of Great Interest

the Navy, acts up in all directions at once.

On this Atlantic mission on which we are embarked we have run into our share of wind and rain and fog and rough seas with green water breaking over the bow or forecastle but our ship is a sturdy old craft (even if our supercargo is not) and weathers every change with a smartness which makes you forget her grey hair which is grey paint in this case.

In contrast to the antiquity of the "tin can" is her trim, trig, sharp young staff of officers. Ensigns just out of Annapolis, junior lieutenants, seniors—all with considerable something on the ball.

They stand their watches, they eat, they sleep a little but mostly they study and do paper work. The paper work, apparently developed over the long period of peace-time years since the World War, appears appalling even to a man who considers his income tax blank a 10-minute assignment.

The officers add, subtract, take inventories, scribble mystic notes on mounds of scrap paper. Long solemn looking papers, short solemn looking papers, batches of papers clamped together, batches of papers, bound together.

Apparently they are always life-or-death papers for somebody is always sitting up a little later than usual, chiseling another hour out of sleep-time to get out some paper which just had to be gotten out.

Even the crew has its study and paper work—lessons and assignments, from the seniors for the next grade in their line. The third class radioman wants to be second class. The second class wants to be first class. The first class wants to be chief so they stand their watches, eat their chow, grab a couple of hours sleep, and plunge into their assignments.

In peace-time, tied up to a wharf in some calm harbor, perhaps it works—perhaps staffers and crew plugging and working and writing away have their time for orderly sleeping and eating and shipboard tasks.

Under emergency conditions with ships at sea, maintenance tasks longer and harder, redoubled watches, frequent general quarters alarms which bring everyone to battle stations for as much as an hour at a time, the paper work seems incredibly large.

However, give the Navy this credit—if it has set up a stiff set of conditions under which to operate it also has set up goals to bring out the last drop of energy and ambition in its personnel.

There is always a little more base pay ahead, another rank to be reached and the only way anyone can qualify is to climb right up on top of that pile of paper work and lick it.

After paper work, guns seem easy.

Nothing makes a selective service man in camp happier than a letter from home or a home-town newspaper in the daily mail, army officials said recently after an extensive survey.

Next in order, the selective service youth likes sweets such as candy, cookies and chocolates—and chewing gum!

Officers say that on the march the gum helps keep the boys from drinking too much water and from dipping into their lunch ration.

Other offerings which bring a smile of pleasure to the enrollee include a general repertoire of utilities among which are books of stamps, flashlights, a towel now and then, toilet articles, and reading materials.

Officers say that if relatives want to be sure their addressee gets what's mailed to him, they should address the letter or package in this way: Name first, his company or battery second, his regiment third, and, lastly the name of the post office.
